Next Friday is the first anniversary of famous hunt of the Briarbrooke Club. The doing pretty well nowadays, thank you, but report has it that the central figure in the great event has been permitted to disappear into almost ignoble oblivion. It wasn't even mentioned in the Red Book. Recently some of the young men who participated in the stirring tragedy have discussed the feasibility of securing the valuable trophy—the coonskin—and hang it over the doorway to the Propylacum's big hall.

it is claimed elsewhere that the interesting relic has been stored in the Indiana Trust Company's big vault for safekeeping pend-ing the organization of the Briarbrooke historical society for the diffusion of proc-yonlotor information. Society has taken up no new fad since this great hunt, even pass-ing the summer without an attempt at

A young man of this city who goes in soclety somewhat was reproached a few days ago for not taking unto himself a wife. He had this to say as his reason for not having become a benedict some time ago: "Well, and I really cannot settle my affections on one at all. Now, there are about five whom I know I could be happy with, but each one for a different reason. I really believe I should like a composite girl—one who has the eyes and the fascinations of A; one who has the discretion, good judgment and careful speech of B; one who has the sweetness and loveableness of C; one who has the strong character of another whose name bethese, whose name is F., but she, though not married, may belong to another. If there should a girl be found who is like F. or has the many qualities which the other five possess, she could have me."
